Ziegler named Captain

There's a new Captain on the job at the Lemon Grove Sheriff's Sub-station, but she's no stranger to the position. Lynne Ziegler was promoted to Captain February 8, 1991, making her the first woman to ever hold the position in Lemon Grove.

Ziegler has had a taste of what it was like to be the Captain since Jim Roache was elected San Diego County Sheriff. Ziegler took the reins of command so admirably during this time, that Mayor Jim Dorman read a proclamation declaring her Honorary Captain before Ziegler even had the chance to be promoted.

She said she expects to be in Lemon Grove for about a year and then will probably be transferred to a position in a jail.

"I'm really glad to be staying in Lemon Grove and to be promoted," said Ziegler. "I love it in Lemon Grove."

Ziegler grew up in San Francisco and first came to San Diego in 1969 to attend San Diego State University. "I liked it so much I stayed," she said. From there she pursued a law enforcement career that included serving as a Lieutenant at the Descanso detention facility and a Sergeant at the Santee Sheriff's station.

Helix directors discuss ways to reduce water use without stopping all construction

A discussion of methods to control, but not to shut down the construction industry during the worsening water crisis was the highlight of the February 20 meeting of the Board of Directors of the Helix Water District.

Reacting to a series of proposals for controlling the amount of water used on construction sites and in completed new construction, the Board was unanimous in expressing its desire to not "shut down" the industry, should the situation worsen.

Among the proposals submitted (for discussion only) were: Applying the same 30 percent conservation expectation to construction sites; a program for granting a new construction meter only after an already completed projects meter has been turned in; the installation of meters already paid for; and, should the conservation mandate reach 50 percent, a cut-off of all construction meters except those directly affecting the public health and safety.

Responding to the latter point, Board Chairman Warren Buckner was adamant in his support of the construction industry. Noting that, in the HWD, the impact on water supplies of ongoing construction is very small, Buckner suggested that a total shut down was not necessary even at the 50 percent conservation point.

Board members were in receipt of a letter from the California Construction Industry Federation outlining its own views toward growth and water demand. In part, the letter noted that, "The County Water Authority has demonstrated that new construction adds 2 to 3 percent maximum demand to the water supply. However, this figure can be adjusted downward, due to the fact that every new person migrating to our County brings with them about a 110-gallon per day demand, regardless of new home construction. Every child born in our County brings a demand for water."

The letter also listed a number of what they referred to as "real solutions."

These included requirements for the installation of ultra-low flow toilets and water fixtures as well as low-water use landscaping materials.

Also referred to was the so-called "Morro Bay plan" in which new construction meters were granted only if the builders promised to retrofit a number of existing community dwellings with water-saving fixtures.

In a lighter portion of the meeting, the Board presented awards to the winners of the T-shirt decorating contest they had sponsored. Middle school students from throughout the area had been invited to submit water conservation-oriented designs that could be transferred to T-shirts. Winning the $100 first place award was Santino Garcia of Santa Sophia Academy; second place was Summer Stuart of Flying Hills School and third place to Courtney Wardrip of Greenfield Junior High. All three will go on to a national contest.

Also honored with a plaque was 25-year assistant field maintenance superintendent Dennis McDonald.

Cardiac lab celebrates 5th year

When it opened its cardiac lab and cardiac surgical suite in March, 1986, Grossmont Hospital began a new era in the treatment of patients of heart disease. Today, the hospital is celebrating its fifth anniversary of providing cardiac services with the opening of its second cardiac catheterization lab.

Jack Madowitz, M.D., medical director of the Cardiovascular Institute at Grossmont described cardiac catheterization as a procedure that injects dye into a patient's heart to allow physicians to make a diagnosis. He said that close to 4,000 cardiac catheterizations have been performed at the hospital since 1986, and about 900 cardiac surgical cases have been handled by the hospital since the program began.

"This first five years has seen tremendous growth in Grossmont's cardiac program. We are looking forward to even greater service to the community in the future," he said, adding that the hospital is continuing to expand its cardiac services. "Our cardiologists will now begin implanting all routine permanent pacemakers," he said.

Tips on surviving the drought

Despite the rain that we were blessed with this week, the drought isn't over and the increasing publicity that it's generating gave impetus to these B-words.

Also, discussion around the tables at the morning "coffee caucus" has produced some promising activity on the part of our concerned consumers. It would appear that the volunteer program of cutting back on water consumption can, and is, working.

Southern California is best described as a desert with probably just barely enough water supplied by natural sources to satisfy the very first inhabitants of San Diego. The Indians had sufficient water to use for their agriculture, drinking water for both man and beast, and for their ablutions, if they were not hung up on overly-frequent bathing. The rainfall was sufficient to keep the natural lakes at least partially liquid, and the San Diego River ran year-round at varying depths. The water table of the terrain was high, so that their meager needs were usually well met.

Nowadays, it is radically different. Natural water supplies were plunged into insufficiency many hundreds of thousands of census-totals ago. Even the damming up of streams and very vigorous water collection projects of long ago, are woefully inadequate to satisfy our population needs.

Now, it is critical, and the day that we turn on the spigot and NO WATER COMES OUT, is not far away, unless we conserve. Some of the following ideas are common knowledge, and some may not be.

Prior to washing a dish or shaving, try collecting the cold water in a pan as it brings on the desired hot water. Dump it into a bucket and use it to water the patio plants. Put a brick or quart bottle in the water closet to reduce the flush volume in the commode. Also, try to limit the flushings to one per sitting. Someone taught us to burn a paper match in the bathroom after every use to nullify odors that may occur. Brushing one's teeth in a hunting camp was easily accomplished by first using a cup of water for the brushing, and a second to rinse. This can be just as easily done in any modern bathroom.

Lawns can get by on reduced watering without drying. Cut those timed sprinklers in half, and I will bet that you won't see a difference. Also, just pay attention to that hose that you put under the rose bushes. Don't wait until you settle down in bed for the night, and then hear that water running in the pipes and I hope that you do get up to turn it off.

Establish a time sequence and stick to it. Leave it on "til lunch time," or some other specified point in time, to help in remembering. Washing a car is much more effectively done by soaping it down from a sudsy bucket first, and then, a quick rinse. Do not drop that running hose in the gutter while you vacuum out the floor mats. Water your vegetable garden with a hand-held hose. Most garden plots are over-watered, my tomato-growing experts tell me.

Last, but not least, there is the practice of ablutions. I do not recommend going back to the native American way, or even the old-time Saturday night baths that we took on the farm. A large tub in the middle of the kitchen floor was filled with heated water from the wood stove. The family bathed in order of seniority, and I was in high school before I know what it was to be first in the tub. I think that it was Prom night, but I'm not quite sure. Showers should be quick; wet down, soap up lavishly, then do a quick rinse.

I have a friend who has given up branch water with his evening highball, but I don't really think that will have much of an impact ... but it is possible.

Woman's club will nominate new officers at next meeting

Lemon Grove General Woman's Club will meet on Friday, March 8 at the Lemon Grove Baptist Church. President Dorothy Smith will call the meeting to order in Blaine Hall of the church at 1:30 p.m. There will be nominations of officers for 1991-92. The program will be a talk on water conservation by a representative from Helix Water District. Hostesses serving refreshments will be Lydia Lairsey and Mae Bowlin.

The code enforcement game

A letter came across our council desk in praise of our code enforcement officer, Mr. Craig Bonner. This job, in any municipality, does not often attract such plaudits. It is not the officer that discourages praise -- it is what he has to do in the line of duty. Code enforcement is a nice term for policing the neighborhoods for violations in many categories that are not necessarily purposefully committed by property owners. There are many things that just evolve or happen, without knowledge that they are violations, or with real intent to be in a position whereby one might be cited.

Most violations are noted by neighbors who report them, and that is where Craig comes in. He really does not "sneak around town with a spyglass, looking for someone to put the arm on," believe me. He is overworked just doing the initial inspections and the follow-up working involved in reported code violations. Some people do not even know that they are violating the codes until he sets them straight, so there certainly is no criminal intent involved.

Inoperative vehicles are by far the worst offenders. Leaving a car out on the street for long periods of time is a violation, and even an eyesore junker on private property can also be a violation. Accumulation of just "junk" causes our town to be "junky," and we would like these things eliminated. It is also not legal to operate a home auto repair business, or even to work on your own vehicles if visible from the street by neighbors and passers by. Barking dogs cause complaints that must be checked out and resolved. Home occupations do require business licenses. The best definition of a home occupation is one where it is carried on in complete secrecy. No sign, or employee parking, or delivery vans, or even abnormal pedestrian traffic a business is likely to generate over a normal residence, is permissible. There were 17 reported violations of this code in 1990.

The sign ordinance has ordered abatement of rooftop signs, illegal freeway-oriented signs, and other signs that violate size or location requirements. Garage sales are allowable twice each year on a single premises, and are supposed to be just that -- not an outlet for commercial products in quantity. Last year, Craig inspected over 1,100 sites and was very successful. He only issued ten citations and was able to get most all of the violations corrected without unpleasant legal procedures. He did have to refer 28 inoperative vehicles to the Sheriff's Department for disposition, but only two instances of all the other activity had to go that far.

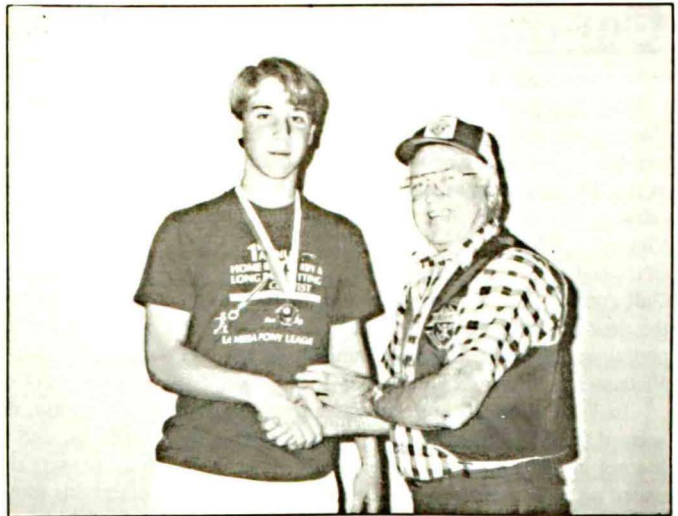

It should be remembered that Craig took over the previous code enforcement officer's job after a time lag that presented him with a large case load the first day on the job. He has done well, and we are most happy with him. He is a former California Highway patrol officer, and is a large and impressive man. His affable personality and warm smile may give the indication that he is a pussycat, but I do not believe that I would rely heavily on that impression, especially if I were violating a City ordinance. He is not eliciting complaints, but he has an office at City Hall where a message can be left regarding same. Call 464-6934 and ask for the code enforcement office. Better yet, stop by City Hall and meet him.

Councilman Bob Burns will address matters of concern to Lemon Grove and its citizens. If you have questions or suggestions for Dr. Burns, send them to P.O. Box BB, Lemon Grove, 91946.

Commentary

by Paul Treske

With George Bush's stern ultimatum to Saddam Hussein and the subsequent launching of the long-awaited ground offensive, those of us who stay glued to the TV newscasts are hearing a somewhat new refrain; that we are, at last, doing away with the Vietnam syndrome. Those wonderful pundits from CNN and elsewhere suggest that in pursuing the Gulf conflict to total victory, we are finally closing the door on the American penchant for the kind of partial war efforts to which we limited ourselves in Vietnam and further back in Korea.

In both Vietnam and Korea, our objectives seemed to be in the aiding of a beleaguered country but not in the total defeat of its enemy. Thus, each ended with the question: Why were we really there?

The same question is, of course, asked by many regarding the Gulf. Is it just for oil? Are we interfering? But here, at least, we have a genuinely evil enemy -- a man whose ambitions are not simply as before-- to unify two portions of an original nation, but to create for himself a power coalition which could threaten our Allies and the world's economy. Saddam's brutality has become our best political weapon. And so, we can now proclaim to the world that the Vietnam syndrome is gone for good, and the United States really "means what it says." In actuality, this may or may not be true in the future and much will depend on the global situation within which we find ourselves.

But, for many months now, an infinitely more significant exorcism of the Vietnam illness has been going on: the extraordinary efforts all of us have gone through to make sure that our soldiers know they are loved and supported.

The treatment of the Vietnam veteran remains one of the most shameful episodes in American history. Those men did not ask to be sent to the jungles of Vietnam and had no role in the political decisions that sent them there. And yet, some were reviled, jeered at and spit upon when they returned while thousands of so-called Americans gleefully marched with the Viet Cong flag and burned their own.

Of course, dissent and opposition are inherently American, and protest was, and is, a cherished right; but, to scream hatred and loathing at fellow Americans who were attempting to do their duty was unforgivable.

Today, it is as if the nation is finally saying, "We know we were wrong to treat them that way ... please, forgive us." Today's anti-war protest is active and vigorous, but the overwhelming majority of those who protest are careful to say, "I am against the war, but I support our soldiers." No one here carries the Iraqi flag in an anti-war demonstration and the few who have attempted to burn the American flag have been shouted down by their own people.

It has taken over 20 years, but it would appear that our nation is at last indirectly acknowledging the dreadful disservice done to the Vietnam veteran. We can be sure that those returning from the Gulf will return to the warm and grateful reception they deserve.

The Pursuit of Perfection

by Joseph Walker

Hanging directly over my computer terminal at work is a fascinating piece of art by a man who calls himself Cuna Joe. It's called a "mola," a form of expression unique to the Cuna Indians on the San Blas Island, just off the coast of Panama.

A mola is a kind of tapestry. Only, instead of weaving different patterns and designs into the cloth, Cuna artists create their masterpieces by laying different colors of cloth on top of each other. They then cut into the cloth, layer by layer, resulting in pictures and designs of surprising delicacy and detail.

Cuna Joe sounded a little like a sculptor when he told my father-in-law, who acquired my mola, that his craft consists simply of "cutting away the cloth that isn't supposed to be there."

But my mola, a colorful tribute to Latin American patriot Simon Bolivar, does contain a flaw; a barely noticeable splotch of orange and purple in a spot that should be, according to the pattern of the piece, solid yellow. All molas contain similar flaws. Cuna Joe said the flaws are deliberate, because the Cunas believe a perfect mola imprisons the soul of the artist within it. "We want to be close to perfect," he said, "but we don't want to be perfect."

The pursuit of perfection is similarly problematic for many in our culture. On the one hand, we expect it for ourselves. You know, the perfect job, the perfect family, the perfect clothes, the perfect body. But on the other hand, we don't want anyone to expect it of us - least of all, ourselves - for fear that we may somehow lose our souls in the futile pursuit of an unattainable level of excellence.

Take sports, for example. The other day I was playing in a church league basketball game, and to be perfectly candid, I wasn't doing very well. My body just won't do everything my mind tells it to do. And the things that it is capable of doing, it doesn't do very quickly. So I found myself zigging when I should have been zagging, jumping when I should have kept my feet on the ground, and shooting when I should have known better.

All of which was OK. I knew I was trying to do my best, and none of the other players on my team was doing any better. But, we were having a pretty good time, and the game remained amazingly close - until Roger, a former colleague of mine who was officiating the game, made a horrible call against me.

Please don't misunderstand. This wasn't just a questionable call. It was atrocious. Everyone in the gym could see it, including our opponents, who were doing everything they could to avoid laughing. The call (and the ensuing technical foul on our team for protesting it) resulted in a five-point swing in the score, and we ended up losing by two.

And yes, I'll admit it, I was mad. Really mad. I walked up to Roger, who was just zipping up his jacket. He smiled at me and extended his hand in friendship. I kept my hands in my coat pockets.

"You blew it, Roger," I told him. "You cost us the game."

There were probably a lot of things he could have said, like how we might not have lost if I had been able to hit the layups I had missed. Instead, he thrust his hand into his own pocket. "OK, maybe it was a mistake," he said softly, "but it was an honest mistake." He started to leave, then he turned and said, "I'll make a deal with you for next time. I'll call a perfect game if you'll play a perfect game."

He was right, of course. It was unfair of me to demand perfection of him if I wasn't willing to expect it of myself, as well. The simple fact is, we all fall humanly short of perfection at times - some of us more often than others. Few of us do so intentionally, as the Cunas do with their molas. But, we all make mistakes in our lives; if not in one arena, then in another. Life has a way of distributing parcels of imperfection to each of us. That's part of what makes life the fascinating adventure that it is. Flaws and our ongoing struggle to overcome them, are part of what helps make people - and life - interesting. And, as we allow one another our humanity and help each other rise above our imperfections, we somehow seem to become more (are you ready for this?) "perfect" ourselves.

And less likely to lose our souls.

From Where I Sit

by Frank Andrews

"Hey Grandpa! Did you ever go to war?"

The recent war in the Persian Gulf had gotten my young grandson's attention. Now, this was my opportunity to tell him about his "Gramps" in the "Big One," WWII. I really didn't lie to him, I just used the truth carelessly.

"Well, son, it was like this: I was going to school in Cleveland, Ohio, when the Japs bombed Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941. I can remember it so well as it happened early that Sunday morning. I went home to Minneapolis during the Christmas vacation to marry your grandmother. It was 30-below zero on the 3rd of January, 1942, for our drive back to school. At the ripe-old age of 19, I joined the Navy Sea Bees and passed all tests until the bend over and touch the toes routine. They discovered a growth on my spine, so it was 4F for your Grandpa."

Everybody's kid my age was in service, so my Pops had to do some defending of his son at the local tavern every night after work. That pressure and the undying love for my country, prompted me to have the operation and be one of the boys again.

After a short bout in the hospital, I joined the Army Air Corps Cadet program. I was sworn in on December 31, 1943, but wasn't called up for active duty until March 15, 1944, for an army life riddled with casualties.

I took basic training at Sheppard Field in Wichita Falls, Texas, where I was in top physical condition and won the highest P.T. score amongst several hundred cadets. While on bivouac, I suffered my first casualty of the war -- I got pneumonia and nearly had to drop out of my class.

The Casualties of War

After six weeks training of mind and body, I was transferred to the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville. There, I learned a four-year course in just six months which included soloing in a J-3 Piper Cub. I did fine until one morning, to keep from getting air-sick, I ate a grapefruit with a glass of milk and then up-chucked it all over my instructor while practicing tail spins - second casualty - but the nice man passed me anyway, after I cleaned his clothes and the airplane.

If I had a full week of high grades and good conduct, I could have Wednesday nights free to visit my little family who lived off-campus. When I returned one Wednesday night after "lights-out," to a dark barracks, I grabbed the overhead rafter and swung into my top bunk as usual. Some of my barrack "buddies" had removed the wires that supported by bed spring and replaced them with store string. When my 200 pounds-plus "hit the hay," I went right on down on top of my lower bunk-mate. The impressions from the spring made him look like a waffle for several days. We both should have been awarded the Purple Heart for that most thrilling casualty.

After Fayetteville, Arkansas, I was stationed on a B-25 Bomber Base in Pampa, Texas. There, I nearly died of the worst casualty of all - boredom. After the war with Germany and Japan had ended, I was discharged on October 15, after a very exciting 19 months while the Army didn't know what to do with me. I was surplus personnel, and could have been, but wasn't called back to active duty at anytime.

"So there, son, how's that for an heroic stint in the war?"

Sports Commentary

by John E. Wirges

Spring training is big news with the troops

All hands and ships' cooks in the Saudi seas and desert keep up with major league spring training happenings to help ease the stress of their wartime daily routines.

Baseball folks are all due in camp today, and full workouts are the order of the day from now until the exhibition season gets underway next week.

After 22 years of growing together, making friends and fostering a great relationship, the city of Yuma finds itself auditioning to new San Diego owner/ management for the right to remain the Padres' winter home.

New Padre VP/GM Joe McIlvaine is toying with the idea of moving future Padre pre-season practices to the Phoenix area, ostensibly, to cut down on spring training travel-time.

Such news is not likely to be lost in the gathering of baseball fans along the Kuwaiti frontier or in waters of the Persian Gulf. Such details of daily doings among the Grapefruit League teams and the Cactus League clubs add mirth and meaning to ship's daily newspapers, command news telecasts and field unit news and sports publications.

When fightin' folk get a break in their day's occupation, they read everything they can get their hands on. Everything from old swimsuit issues of Sports Illustrated, down to their day-old copies of the European area "Stars and Stripes."

It's hard for ships' sportswriters and battle-area journalists to keep up with fresh baseball stories, so much of what appears under sports headings in unit papers is rehashed, remembered and rewritten. Most importantly, it is read, re-read, discussed and digested in minute detail. Car guys and gals may be far away from home, but they are never too far away to be rootin' for their hometown team. Marines chugging up the eastern Kuwaiti seaboard mostly hail from Camp Pendleton.

Almost half the U.S. Battle Fleet and Naval Air Wings flying their deadly missions in the skies of the Kuwaiti Theater of Operations (KTO) are homeported in the San Diego area.

The Mideast is prime Padre fan country. If you could take a break with a crew here, or a fire team there, chances are, you'd be talking about home, Mom, apple pie and Tony Gwynn. You'd get queries about Bruce Hurst, "Bip" Roberts and Craig Lefferts.

You're sure to hear questions asking about the success of Benito Santiago's recovery from his broken arm, and whether the Fred McGriff and Tony Fernandez trade for Roberto Alomar and Joe Carter is going to help the Padres.

Hopefully, some of the game broadcasts by former Marine Corps fighter pilot Jerry Coleman and mike-side partner Rick Monday, will be re-broadcast over the Armed Forces Radio Network.

You can believe this: Spring training action at Yuma is a mighty big draw in the desert and waters of the Gulf.

Joe Freed on the Movies

This Week's movies:

Scenes From A Mall and Shipwrecked

Scenes from a Mall

Woody, Woody, Woody! How could you do this to me?

I get all excited about you doing a little free-lance acting (hoping it means I'll see you in more movies, more often) and what do you do? First of all, you take second billing to Bette Midler; one of the greatest filmmakers in history with his name under Bette Midler. What's even worse, it was for an awful movie. Director Paul Mazursky's new comedy about modern marriage is short on laughs and very disappointing.

Nick and Deborah Fifer (Allen and Midler) spend their 16th wedding anniversary shopping in the Beverly Center in Los Angeles. The day begins simple and sweet, but soon deteriorates when Nick reveals that over the years he's been unfaithful four times. At first, Deborah is shocked and quite hostile, but as their conversation turns into a screaming match, she admits that, she too, has been unfaithful. By the end of the day, the Fifers have threatened divorce, beat up on each other, and made love in a movie theater; strange ways, indeed, to settle their marital spat.

Both stars improve their poorly written roles with great acting, especially Allen, who breaks the whining barrier, dons a pony tail and Italian suit, and is even a little bit macho!

Midler is sweet and ferocious as Deborah, a living tribute to double standards. But even acting of this quality cannot rescue a screenplay that is droll and repetitive.

I don't even know why they called it "Scenes From A Mall." Yes, the film takes place in a shopping center, but the location doesn't forward the story line. Mazursky and co-writer Roger L. Simon spend a lot of time introducing "mallish" characters -- street performers, rap singers, "teenyboppers," and yuppies -- and then abandon them. We only get to sample these personalities, and they never interact with Allen or Midler. The only exception is a mischievous mime (Bill Irwin) who is given a great deal of exposure, but isn't very funny.

As a matter of fact, the entire movie isn't very funny.

Nor is it effectively dramatic or sentimental. I guess it's just like watching married people squabble for two hours ... and we've got our own parents for that.

Critic's Rating: C-

Shipwrecked

It's the usual Disney family fare, and adventure about stowaways, tropical islands and piracy. Stain Smestad is endearing as the young hero, Haakon Haakonsen, and Gabriel Byrne plays a menacing villain. The film's a bit corny in spots, sometimes downright silly. But the kids should love it.

'Kind Lady' now playing at the Grove

Octad-One Productions is presenting "Kind Lady" at the Grove Playhouse every weekend through March 10.

This is a suspenseful drama depicting the uncertain attempts of an aristocratic lady to escape the artful scheming of diabolically clever crooks.

Tickets are $10 for the general public and $9 for seniors and students. Seating is open.

Reservations can be made for a particular night. For more information, call 466-3987 or 583-2418.

Eleanor Estes and Andrew Rowe in Octad-One Productions' staging of "Kind Lady," now playing at the Grove Playhouse.

'Captain January' comes to ECPAC

An extraordinary evening of Hollywood history is planned for Saturday, March 9, at 7:30 when Grossmont-Cuyamaca's College of Extended Studies presents the 1924 silent film, "Captain January," starring Baby Peggy.

Newly-orchestrated live music will be supplied by the San Diego Cine-Phonic Orchestra to underscore the film.

Highlighting the gala evening at the East County Performing Arts Center will be an appearance by Baby Peggy herself (now Diana Cary of La Jolla and Carlsbad).

Cary was one of the earliest and brightest of the child stars and was at the apex of her career with "Captain January." She toured all over the United States with the film which earned millions. It was the first time in the history of motion pictures that a child performer made an extensive tour with a film.

"Captain January" is adapted from the much-loved book by Laura E. Richards, first published in 1890. In addition to Baby Peggy, the film stars veteran actors Hobart Bosworth and Irene Rich. A story of the New England coast, it was filmed in the then-desolate coastline around Laguna Beach, and was the first film made there.

Diana Cary is a popular member of the San Diego community and the author of two books about the film capital, "Hollywood's Children" and "The Hollywood Posse." She is full of amusing anecdotes about the making of her films and the early days in Hollywood, stories she will share with the audience.

Balinese shadow play, part of World of Music series, coming next to ECPAC

The ancient theater art of Balinese shadow play is the second program in the current World of Music series at the East County Performing Arts Center.

The performances of Larry Reed's Shadow Play Theatre Co. on March 4 and 5 are co-sponsored by the Grossmont-Cuyamaca Community College District and San Diego State University. The event includes a 7 p.m. lecture/demonstration and the shadow play begins at 8:30 p.m.

The culture and music of shadow theater have been handed down through generations. These performances will feature Balinese leather puppets, dialogue in ancient and modern languages and accompaniment on authentic bronze metallophones. The shadow play is a classical form of storytelling based on ancient myths and blends high drama with improvisation and slapstick comedy. For information and tickets -- adults $7.50, seniors/students $6) -- contact the Performing Arts Center box office at 440-2277.

Foothills artists feature Venus Smith; Montague to demonstrate Wendell Montague, art instructor at Patrick Henry High School, will provide a demonstration of his artistic techniques at the next meeting of the Foothills Art Association on March 7 at 7 p.m.

Montague was past president of both the San Diego Art Institute and the San Diego Watercolor Society, and has received numerous awards for his work. His demonstration will blend art and music, and the barbershop quartet, "Tonic Tones," will play at the gallery.

Also, Foothills Art Association announces its featured artist for March is Venus Smith, who works in watercolors and studied at schools on the East Coast, Southwest, and in the San Diego area. Her show of landscapes and still lifes will begin on Friday, March 8, and will continue Tuesday through Saturday from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. until April 4.

Other members of Foothills may submit one previously unseen work for a judging by the viewing public.

Foothills Art Association is a non-profit group of local artists. The gallery is located at 8051 University Avenue, La Mesa. For more information, call Teresa at 660-0889.

It's 'Save Your Vision' week in Lemon Grove

Nearly one in six children between the ages of five and 12 have vision problems that can result in learning disabilities, according to Lemon Grove's James Cummins, O.D.

Dr. Cummins recommends that parents pay special attention to their family's vision care during national "Save Your Vision" week, March 3 to 9.

Parents and teachers tend to look for obvious vision problems when the not-so-obvious ones most often inhibit a child's ability to learn to read, he said.

"Some vision problems can be detected by a standard eye chart," but the perceptual or near-point focusing problems that interfere with a child's ability to do classroom work are not so obvious," he explained.

A child with 20/20 eyesight can still have poor vision for reading, and may see nothing but blurred letters when looking at a printed page, Dr. Cummins said.

When the eyes do not work together as a team, the child might see double, and if eye movements are slow and halting, a young reader may find it necessary to use a finger to keep his/her place. All of these vision problems can contribute to reading problems, but they may not be detected during a typical school vision screening, he said.

"Children do not outgrow learning-related vision problems, therefore, the earlier they are professionally diagnosed and treated, the earlier a child can be on the way to learning to read and is reading to learn."

"Save Your Vision" week is sponsored nationally by the American Optometric Association and locally by the San Diego County Optometric Society; this year marks the 64th anniversary of this designated week.

Obituary

Donald L. Heyser, inventor and historian

Lemon Grove historian Donald L. Heyser was recently honored at a memorial service by family, friends and members of the Lemon Grove Historical Society.

Heyser was one of the founders of that historical group, and acted as its historian.

He died locally on January 20, at the age of 74. Heyser was born July 4, 1916 in San Fernando, CA., and moved to Lemon Grove with his family in 1926. He attended Lemon Grove Grammar School where he became best friends with Trig (Adan) Treganza.

He graduated from Grossmont High School in 1936, and then attended Port Arthur College in Texas.

He married his childhood sweetheart, Ione E. Heyser, who survives him. They made their home in Bonita Valley for the last 25 years.

In his capacity as Historical Society historian, Heyser wrote his memories of growing-up in the agricultural community and encouraged others to make written histories of their Lemon Grove remembrances. At every monthly meeting of the Society, he would read one of his stories about his childhood; tales of hunting rabbits and coyotes in the undeveloped areas of Bonita, Paradise Hills and Sweetwater Valley.

The information he gathered will be priceless in years to come, according to Pete Smith, president of the Society.

At the memorial service, interesting remembrances of Heyser were presented by fellow Society member Amorita Treganza, O.D.

Heyser was instrumental in solving many engineering-type problems, especially during World War II, according to a eulogy written by his nephew, Greg Heyser, and read by another nephew, Jeff Heyser.

During the 1940s, he unraveled the dilemma of welding aluminum and helped to develop color print film.

For the Ryan Aircraft Co., he solved awkward problems on the assembly line and designed electronic devices which were needed by the government.

Heyser is survived by his wife, Ione, of Bonita; four step-children, Patricia A. Hawley, Ronald Barager, Richard Barager and Stephen Barager; five step-grandchildren and three step-grandchildren.

He is also survived by his brother, Leslie Heyser and sister-in-law, Patricia Heyser, both of Pollock Pines, Ca., and another nephew, Jeff A. Heyser of Alamo, Ca.

The family requests memorial donations be made to the San Diego Hospice.

Business financing seminar demonstrates opportunities for East County merchants

East County banks are joining with the Certified Development Corporation, County Supervisor George Bailey and the Small Business Administration to offer a business financing seminar March 20 for those interested in learning more about the financing opportunities available for businesses in the East County area.

This free seminar will provide information on public and conventional financing, line-of-credit loans, construction and real estate loans as well as Small Business Administration (SBS) loans.

"The purpose of this seminar is to provide our businesses with the opportunity to obtain valuable information, ask questions, and meet personally with the people who back up businesses financially--local bankers," said Supervisor Bailey.

There will be an extensive "meet the lender" period in which persons can talk one-on-one with bank representatives.

"I am pleased," added Bailey, "at the cooperation of the financial community whose members are joining together for the third time to sponsor this event."

The program includes presentations by Tony Virgil of the SBA, Bud Hamilton of AMA and Associates, Herb Ridgeway from Concepts on Packing, Arthur

Goodman from the Dan Diego Certified Development Corporation and Chris Kugler, a real estate broker with 7A loan experience.

The seminar will begin at 5 p.m. at the La Mesa Community Center located at 4975 Memorial Drive.

Advance registration is requested. For additional information, call 291-3594.
